

Basic ideas of system physics in relation to biophysics

Roman S. Ingarden

This paper presents limitations of classical reductionistic and holistic attitudes towards biology on the basis of analysis of bifurcation processes. Possibilities of application of time-space information geometry of states to physics and biology are discussed as well as perspectives of expansion of the system physics to include biological processes.